

north devon arts

building the arts in north devon

North Devon Arts – Privacy Policy

This policy covers how North Devon Arts treats personal information that we collect and receive, including information related to your past use of North Devon Arts services. Personal information is information about you that is personally identifiable like your name, address, email address, or phone number, and that is not otherwise publicly available.

This policy does not apply to the practices of companies and organisations that North Devon Arts does not own or control, such as Galleries. Please refer to their individual privacy policy statements.

We respect your privacy. In the few instances where we do collect information from you, we use it only for the purpose for which you supplied the information.

Cookies are web programs that can store data and which are downloaded from the website to be stored in your browser for later use by the website. We do not use cookies on our website, and we never collect information about you without your knowledge. All information relating to members that is displayed to the general public on the NDA website is displayed at the request of the member, and can be removed at any time at the request of the member.

You may have your personal information removed from NDA records at any time on your request.

We will never sell, rent, exchange or give away your information, except to provide products or services you have requested, and except as required by law, or to defend against legal claims. Members' details will not be passed to anyone wanting information on, or wanting to contact individual member/s, without first getting that member/s permission.

If you have any questions about North Devon Arts commitment to member privacy, then please email us with your question.

North Devon Arts, March 2009